Clarity of solution

The determination of the clarity of solution is carried out as described under 1.11.1 Colour of liquids using a black background. The source of light must be such that opalescence standard TS2 can be readily distinguished from water. A solution is considered clear if its opalescence is not more pronounced than that of opalescence standard TS2.